Some scientists made an experiment by putting in a cage 5 monkeys and a ladder with bananas on top. Every time one monkey went up the ladder, the scientists sprayed 26 ones with cold water. After a while, whenever a monkey tried to climb the ladder, the rest of the monkeys would beat him up. Later on, as it turned out, no monkey dared to climb the ladder 27 the attractive bananas. Scientists then decided to replace one of the caged monkeys with a new monkey. The first thing this new comer did was to go up the ladder and 28, the other monkeys beat him up. Having been beaten, the new member then learned not to go up the ladder without knowing why. The same thing happened to the second new ladder-climbing monkey. The first monkey participated in the beating, too. A third and a fourth were substituted and the beating was repeated 29 all the monkeys were replaced. Eventually, in the cage were a group of 5 monkeys, which still continued to beat up any ladder-climber, though none of them had the experience of cold showers. If it's possible to ask 30 the group beating, the monkeys would probably answer, "I don't know. That's how things are done around here."

Summers are usually not a good time for outdoor exercise. However, water aerobics or aqua aerobics is a cool way to reach a healthy 31 and beat the heat of summer. It is a great combination of fun and exercise and involves various body movements in a rhythmic style and 32 kinds of dance steps.

As one is immersed in water, the body weight lightens due to water's feature of being able to float. This makes water aerobics a non-weight 33 sport and one less straining on the joints and back. As a consequence, the 34 of injury are fewer. Since water aerobics is a low influence form of workout, it is especially 35 to the elderly, and to people with arthritis, back pain and diabetes.

When it comes to 36 blood circulation and muscle endurance, water aerobics is a safer option in comparison with standard aerobics. It not only boosts the continuous movement of blood around one's body but 37 one's heart and lungs. Moreover, water is denser than air and 38 is the resistance offered by it. That's why regular water exercise results in rapid toning of body muscles, for the water exerts resistance on the working muscles from all directions. According to the report, merely walking in the water for about an hour will burn nearly 39 as many calories as walking on land will do. 40 this property of water, water aerobics is a less straining way to lose more weight compared with most other sports.

- (A) certain (B) twice (C) weight (D) so (E) beneficial
(F) considering (G) strengthens (H) moderate (I) improving (J) chances

第 41 至 44 題為題組

Have you joined the excitement over the movie, Jurassic World, this summer's most successful box office hit? While the whole world is having the craze for dinosaurs, a great fossil mystery related to giant dinosaurs has been solved by researchers.

Scientists have long wondered why the dinosaurs that spread across the globe 230 million years ago largely avoided living near the equator, since large, long-necked, plant-eating dinosaurs are absent from the equatorial fossil record.

A group of scientists at the University of Utah found that the tropical climate around the equator was to blame. The area was characterized by wet seasons in some years and extremely little rain in others. What's worse, this area was frequently interrupted by raging wildfires that reached temperatures of up to 600 degrees Celsius every few dozen years.

The conditions would have made it difficult for abundant plants and trees to grow and survive and the more well-known Jurassic dinosaurs would have lived on them. With no consistent source of vegetative food, large plant-eating dinosaurs were unable to live in the region, while only a few small meat-eating dinosaurs were able to find a food source near the equator.

Researchers also found that the CO₂ levels during this period were four to six times the current levels. The scientists thus remind us of the same dangerous conditions we might face in the future.

"If we continue along our present course, similar conditions in a high-CO₂ world may develop, and put the earth in danger," said Randal Irms, a co-author of the study. In fact, CO₂ levels in the atmosphere have reached a record high for modern times in 2013.

41. Which of the following issues is discussed in the article?
- (A) Why some dinosaurs didn't live at certain area of the earth.
 - (B) Why the movie, Jurassic World, greatly attracts moviegoers.
 - (C) Why dinosaurs suddenly became extinct millions of years ago.
 - (D) Why climate change is an important issue in modern times.
42. Why did the author mention the movie, Jurassic World, in the beginning of the article?
- (A) To inform the readers of the topic of the article.
 - (B) To entertain the readers with something famous.
 - (C) To question the success and popularity of the movie.
 - (D) To attract the readers' attention and arouse their interest.
43. Which of the following inferences is FALSE based on the article?
- (A) No animals could be found at the equator in dinosaur times.
 - (B) Fossil records help scientists understand more about ancient creatures.
 - (C) During dinosaur times, the CO₂ levels were much higher than those are now.
 - (D) Extreme weather conditions can cause plants and trees unable to grow.
44. What is the author's tone at the end of the article?
- (A) Tragic.
 - (B) Playful.
 - (C) Warning.
 - (D) Optimistic.

第45至48題為題組

Computers are already replacing many workers. What can young people learn now that won't be taken over within their lifetimes and that will secure them good jobs over the next 30 years? Teachers in universities are struggling to answer that question.

Most people complete their formal education by their early 20s and expect to draw on it for the better part of a century. But a computer can learn in seconds most of the knowledge that people get in college, and there will be a great many generations of even more powerful computers.

Two strains of thought seem to dominate the effort to deal with this problem. The first is that we teachers should provide to our students some kind of flexible and insight-bearing human learning that cannot be replaced by computers. The second is that we need to make education more paintings and sculptures. One of his best-known characters is Mr. DOB, a mouse-like creature with a round head and large, circular ears. Mr. DOB embodies many of the images coming from Japanese culture such as Hello Kitty. He believes these images provide relief for a stressed society.

In 2003, Murakami gained widespread fame when he partnered with designer, Marc Jacobs, in a new design for a range of Louis Vuitton purses. The creations featured some of his cartoon images and bright colors sparkled among the traditional LV logo. Sales of these bags exceeded $300 million and Murakami's style became recognized worldwide.

Despite welcoming this commercial success, Murakami realized that he needed to re-establish his reputation as a "serious" artist. As he once said in an interview, "I need to rebuild the wall between the commercial art and the fine art I do. I need to focus on the fine art side of me for a while." Since then, he has worked hard to achieve that balance and is now recognized as a leading contemporary Japanese artist.

49. Which of the following is the most suitable title for this passage?
- (A) Murakami and His Colorful Art of Animation.
 - (B) The Cute and Stress-free World in Murakami's Paintings.
 - (C) Murakami: a Low-profile Fashion Designer for LV.
 - (D) Union of the East and the West in Murakami's Art.
50. Which of the following is true about Murakami's career?
- (A) His partnership with LV aroused criticism from some art critics.
 - (B) His major in nihonga blocked his contact with Japanese pop culture.
 - (C) He created Mr. DOB to help his audience ease pressure from the society.
 - (D) He was influenced by American painting techniques because he drew cartoons for Disney.
51. What does the "commercial success" in the last paragraph refer to?
- (A) Murakami's earning of PhD in nihonga.
 - (B) Fame and fortune Murakami brought by his design for LV.
 - (C) The popularity of Murakami's animation character, Mr. DOB.
 - (D) Murakami's status as a leading Japanese contemporary artist.
52. Which of the following best describes Murakami's change after 2003?
- (A) He began to pursue the achievement of fine art.
 - (B) He kept focusing on cooperation with high fashion brands.
 - (C) He preferred Japanese painting techniques to Western ones.
 - (D) He couldn't adapt himself to working with designer, Marc Jacobs.

第 53 至 56 題為題組

Kaplan Test Prep conducted a survey, in which 25% respondents, mostly college admission officials, stated their pressure of having to give an edge to certain applicants. And 16% said they were made to admit some incompetent students who are connected to the rich. The result confirms one of the worst secrets in the college admissions world: Many colleges give admissions advantages to influential applicants. Many college officials have defended the practice, saying that these few exceptions help them raise big donations to help fund scholarships for smart but needy students.

But this age-old policy has also been criticized because of the continuing gaps between college graduation rates for the rich and the poor. Even though colleges say they don't hold a student's poor financial condition against him or her when making admission decisions, they cannot ignore a rich applicant's potential help to their colleges. For example, many wealthy private colleges, like Duke University, set aside some letters of admission for "development admits"—underqualified children of families who are hoped to make large donations. Many public universities also bend the rules in favor of applicants having a parent who is influential or attended the same college. Investigators found that between 2005 and 2009, the University of Illinois admitted hundreds of underqualified students who were connected to politically powerful families.

Seppy Basili, vice president of K-12 programs at Kaplan Test Prep, advises ordinary applicants against giving up because of this small group of "development admits" and "legacies". Despite the small group, "the majority of accepted college applicants are successful due to their outstanding performance," he says. He further notes that such programs are under inspection, since the process of college admission is getting open to the public.

53. The passage is mainly about _____.
- (A) the process how the U.S. college applicants are admitted
 - (B) many U.S. colleges are conducting surveys about their admission applicants
 - (C) many U.S. colleges have been accepting students related to powerful or rich families
 - (D) in the U.S., only a minority of ordinary students can be admitted to prestigious colleges
54. According to Seppy Basili, college admission applicants _____.
- (A) should be treated alike
 - (B) should strive on despite a few cases of development admits
 - (C) should make public the inequality of college admission
 - (D) should give up if they are not connected to influential families
55. In the last paragraph, the word "legacies" means _____.
- (A) talented college applicants
 - (B) powerful college admission officers
 - (C) outstanding academic heritage of colleges
 - (D) family members of wealthy former students
56. Which of the following inferences is true based on the article?
- (A) Such practice as favoring privileged applicants has emerged quite recently.
 - (B) Being wealthy enough, Duke University does not accept any development admits.
 - (C) Public universities tend to treat their applicants more equally than their private counterparts.
 - (D) College officials believe that admission exceptions should be made to help more students in need.
