its whole body. The opah fish pushes itself forward by flapping its fins, which are protected by a layer of fat. The movement produces heat, which provides warmth to its heart, brain and other organs as the fish dives into deep water. It is found that an opah's muscles are consistently five degrees higher than the surrounding water. This is quite remarkable for a giant fish that can grow up to 270 kg. Because it can warm its body, it can move fast to catch its preys and travel long distances.
